Defensive and Evasive Driving

The initial driving brief is presented in a classroom setting and culminates with practical driving exercises giving students the opportunity to practice and demonstrate their level of understanding and ability to apply the concepts and skills taught. Throughout the day the student will practice high speed chases, ramming, and in turn learn to maintain control of the vehicle while making effective driving decisions in aggressive, hostile and congested traffic similar to what they might experience in other regions of the world.

Tactical Medicine and Executive Protection Training

Executive Protection Low Profile Secure Transportation.

With risk levels still high for travellers to Mexico, there is a continued need for foreign corporations with operations there to be able to mitigate travel risk to an acceptable level consistent with business objectives, regulations and standard of care within the industry. Nevertheless, this duty of care requirement has grown for many corporations to include not just high level executives, but also mid level personnel. However, this represents a larger volume of personnel and using the traditional protection solution of armed personnel with armoured vehicles is not a viable option economically speaking, not to mention that evolving tactics by the criminal organizations have improved the way they can target and quickly react to these high profile protection details.

Protective Operations

The protection of an individual is comprehensive and goes well beyond surrounding the individual with agents. As part of the EESS mission of preventing an incident before it occurs, the details rely on meticulous advance work and threat assessments developed by its Intelligence Division to identify potential risks to the principals.
